

Clear2there Enters Medical Video Recording Market

Oklahoma City, OK October 3 , 2011—Clear2there, a leading provider of advanced video surveillance products and Viewbiquity M2M hosted solutions for service providers and enterprises, today announced the formation of a new business unit focused on delivering video technology products and solutions for medical practitioners, professionals and educators. Led by medical technology veteran Lee Jackson, the company's inaugural product, The Surgeon's Eyes™, a head-mounted camera and recording system specially designed to meet the needs of the medical community, is currently being marketed.

“There is tremendous demand for affordable and non-intrusive video recording technology across all professional medical disciplines, including surgeons, dentists, and veterinarians,” said Craig Steen, Clear2there president. “In addition, medical schools are looking at video as a viable solution to accommodate the needs of students while balancing personnel and technology resources. The Surgeon's Eyes is the first camera that is completely aligned with the practitioner's line of sight, enabling viewers to see an image that is identical to what the doctor sees, as well as provide close up views for procedures. As a result, teaching facilities and instructors can effectively demonstrate procedures to a virtually limitless audience. In addition, instructors can simultaneously monitor the actions of multiple students when they are equipped with The Surgeon's Eyes.”

A comprehensive video and audio recording system, The Surgeon's Eyes is the brainchild of Emmy award-winning professional videographer Richard Kashanski and Las Vegas, Nevada based entrepreneur, Terry Wolfe of GoWolfe. Both have been instrumental in the ongoing trial of The Surgeon's Eyes at a well-recognized school of dentistry in the US.
